RYEGATE.

Beautiful land of our fathers rock-ribbed and seamed to the view; Decked are thy hills with a beauty, that ever the ages renew. Staunch stood the houses they builded, those fathers of long ago,
When the land was a forest unbroken save by sound of the axe and the bow.

Of hemlock, of spruce and of fir, snugly built were those houses and low;
Far down at the foot of Blue Mountain, where musical waters flow.
Roomy and wide were those houses, and red as the morning sun,
When seen through the mists of the valley,
just as the day is begun.

Dusky and low were the garrets, with clusters of herbs in view.

For versed were the wives of our fathers, and the love of healing they knew.

Heaped high were the hins in the cellars, and the cribs were full to the caves.

For the winters were long and inclement, and the children were numerous as leaves.

"Mr. Humphrey," said the president of the bank, who had sent for me to come to his private office, "we have $30,000 to go to M. today, and I have a mind to send it by you. Would you

I didn't like the job, for we were in the far west, where desperadoes abounded, and if one of them suspected I had so large an amount with me murder would not stand in his way to possess it. But if I wished promotic n in the bank it would never do for me to flinch at such an offer, which was really an order. So I accepted the

Monday, and it was announced in several sight, wondering if some one of them was not intending to rob me. One perity of the people are satisfied with the son arrested my attention from the peculiarity of his appearance. He was standing on the bank steps when I went out, looking carelessly up the been for several days with Mrs. Emily street. He wore green spectacles, very shabby suit and a high plug hat. The most remarkable feature of his apparel was a waistcoat with stripes resembling those of a zebra. He was evidently down on his luck and had picked up his clothes piecemeal, where he could find them cast off from their Tuesday for Tunbridge, where they are original owners. He paid no attention to pass some time with Mrs. George to me. Indeed, I had no evidence that he was aware of my existence. Going to my room, I took a suit case full of clothes and on emerging noticed the man with the zebra waistcoat on the opposite side of the street looking in at a shop window. His back was had turned a corner. In this way I made sure he had not seen me come out of the house nor during my going away from it. Proceeding to the station. I boarded the train, and as it rolled out the car door opened, and who should step in but the man with the zebra waistcoat. He gave me a glance as he took his seat, and I knew he had spotted me for a victim. But why this fantastic attire? Then it all rushed upon me suddenly. It was to attract my attention from some confederate who was keeping me in sight and who doubtless had informed him of my proceeding. They could only have received the information of my bearing the money from some one in the bank who had let it out for gain or unintentionally. My heart sank within me. But we are all natural gamblers, and I at once laid out a game for my money and my life. I picked up my suit case, which I had deposited on the floor, and held it on my lap. Then I went to the water cooler for a drink, carrying the suit case with me. Next I changed my seat, never for a moment letting the suit case out of my hand. Finally I opened it, pretending to make sure as Mrs. D. E. Merrill of Boston is visit. I did so that no eye was upon me, and, thrusting my hand in between the clothing, gave evidence by my expresat the first stop. I did so and saw the story that German spies have been inthe other end of the car. I looked about me to see if there was any one on whom I could rely for help. There were not half a dozen persons, and they would all be frightened out of their wits the moment the attack was made. I saw my enemies consulting earnestly and felt sure the blow was about to fall. The train was country. While looking out of the winman standing in a field holding three horses. Suddenly the man with the zebra waistcoat sprang up, seized the bell cord and pulled it vigorously. It conductor came into the car for tickets. The brakes were put on, and the train slowed up. The conductor, seeing no reason for stopping, angrily gave a signal to proceed.

Like a whirlwind the two men dashed past me and as they did so seized my suit case. Carrying it with them. they jumped off the train just as it mounted and as they dashed away way to restore peace to the world, and the man with the zebra waistcoat held that is by overcoming the physical might the suit case aloft triumphantly and of German imperialism by force of waved his plug hat. I explained the matter to no one seeping my secret till I had delivered the money and returned, when I told the president of the bank. The incident led to the discovery that our porter was in league with a gang of road agents. The president gave me my choice of a big reward for saving the money or the position of assistant cashler, which he created for me. I chose the latter, soon became cashier and am now president of the bank.

German Peace. The German chancellor has made a pitful attempt to answer the French and British premiers. Perhaps he will now undertake a reply to the American secretary of state. But if he can assail Mr. Lansing with no more success than he attains in his attacks on M. Ribot and Mr. Lloyd George, Herr Michaelis will gain no advantage whatever for the German cause. Does he imagine that he can promote peace by slander? The greater part of the interview he has given out is merely clumsy calumny directed against France, and obviously designated to deprive her of the friendship of Russia. It is probably the kind of two men standing on the platform as structed to tell the Russian soldiers and well. As the train moved on I stepped workmen, so as to set them against a aboard, and my followers re-entered at France fighting for annexation. Of course, only the most ill-informed people could be induced to believe that France planned and pursues a war of conquest. She claims only the restoration of the two provinces, Alsace and Lorraine, of which Germany robbed her in 1870. And such restoration is just. All German talk of peace is vitiated by the underlying resolution to restore running through a sparsely settled nothing that Germany took in the wars of 1864, 1866 and 1870, or that she has dow I saw a short distance ahead a taken in her present war of aggression. While the chancellor asserts that the German government is full of good intentions with respect to peace, the parliamentary leaders and principal newspahappened that at the same time the pers make it perfectly plain that the government means to keep all the conquered territory it can, and put into political vassalage what it cannot annex. When the German troops are withdrawn from France, Belgium, Luxemburg, Serbia, Montenegro, Rumania and Russia we may believe that there is a sincere desire for an honorable peace.
